

A Naturalist in the Guianas (Classic Reprint)

Eugene Andre

Excerpt from A Naturalist in the Guianas I have been asked by Mr. Andre to write a brief preface to the following account of his journeys up the Caura af?uent of the Orinoco, and feel that I cannot well refuse to do so, especially as the author declares that I am in a measure personally responsible for the appearance of the narrative in its present form. But if the reader will turn to the narrative itself, he will quickly discover that no preface is needed to proclaim its merits. In the Geo graphical Journal for September 1902, a paper by Mr. Andre summarised the results of his latest journey and described his ascent of Mount Turagua. But Mr. Andre is still more a naturalist than a geographer, and in particular he has made valuable additions to our know ledge oi the bird life of the great Venezuelan forests, as Dr. Hartert of the Tring Museum has abundantly testified.
