Not illustrated. 1859 Excerpt: ...--he had not flinched, he literally had not moved a muscle. The only change that had taken place was in his eye this, which had hitherto been merely sullen, was now beaming with fury but his form was as motionless as a statue. A stream of blood poured from a wound within an inch of the spot at which I had aimed had it not been for this fact, I should not have believed him struck. Annoyed at the failure of the shot, I tried him with the left-hand barrel at the same hole. The report of the gun echoed over the lake, but there he stood as though he bore a charmed life--an increased flow of blood from the wound, and additional lustre in his eye, were the only signs of his being struck. A Hunters Dilemma. I was now unloaded, and had not a single ball remaining. It was now his turn. I dared not turn to retreat, as I knew he would immediately charge, and we stared each other out of countenance. With a short grunt he suddenly sprung forward, but fortunately, as I did not move, he halted: he had, however, decreased his distance, and we now gazed at each other within ten paces. I began to think buffalo-shooting somewhat dangerous, and I would have given something to have been a mile away, but ten times as much to have had my four-ounce rifle in my hand. Oh, how I longed for that rifle in this moment of suspense! Unloaded, without the power of defence, with the absolute certainty of a charge from an overpowering brute, my hand instinctively found the handle of my hunting knife, a useless weapon against such a foe. Knowing that B. was not aware of my situation at the distance which separated us (about a mile), without taking my eyes from the figure before me, I raised my hand to my mouth and gave a long and loud whistle this was a signal that I kne...
