

The Natural History Review, 1865, Vol. 5 : A Quarterly Journal of Biological Science (Classic Reprint)

G Busk

Excerpt from The Natural History Review, 1865, Vol. 5: A Quarterly Journal of Biological Science It is indeed with no small satisfaction we are able to call the attention of our readers at one time to three different publications on the Zoology of India - one relating to the Mammals, a second to the Birds, and a third to the Reptiles which, although of very different orders of merit as regards the information they contain and the labour bestowed upon them, will each alike serve as a basis for some general remarks upon those parts of the Fauna of British India of which they treat.
